Questions potential clients may have:

What is Business Process Management (BPM)?

How would my business benefit from a BPM project?

What is the scope of a BPM project?

What does the typical BPM project involve?

What are indicators that my business could benefit from a BPM project.

What are typical BPM project goals?

How will our human resources be impacted?

The 'Why' of Samuels Consulting

OPTION#1 follows

We believe that change in business is not an occasional event, it is a daily event; and the most successful businesses, in any industry, demonstrate the ability to measure, analyze and adapt their Business Processes to capitalize on, rather than react to change. This is the cornerstone of our Business Process Management consulting. Samuels Consulting brings strategic and tactical expertise in Business Process analysis and design, use of Technology and optimization of Human Resources in the Business Process.

OPTION#2 follows

We believe that consistently successful businesses demonstrate human resource leadership, a daily focus on the business strategy and a sense of 'being in control' among everyone touching your Business Processes. We achieve this by analyzing your current business processes, identifying what is working and what is not working, aligning the business processes with your business vision and aligning/developing your human resource skills with the needs of your Business Processes. Samuels Consulting offers this service through strategic to tactical hands-on projects. Our results are specific, optimize use of your existing resources and detail new/additional resources that will add multiples of value.

This is the cornerstone of our Business Process Management consulting. Samuels Consulting brings independent strategic through tactical expertise in Business Process analysis and design, use of Technology for data and efficiency and optimization of Human Resources in your Business Processes.